GARB OF EVE AND RAW VEGETABLES JOLTED THE DUKE

Leopold of Austria Put Aside Wife, Who Took to Nature Cult.

END OF THEIR ROMANCE.

He Gave Up Title and Fortune for Actress, Who Now Goes Back to Stage.

day, have summed up the life story of Archanke Leopold Ferdinand, brother of the eloping Crown Princess Louise of Saxony, who renounced his rights to the Austrian throne to marry Mile. Wil-Belmena Adamories, an Austrian dancer

But to-day a sad sequel to the tender tale is written. As a result of the former actress' excentric action in joining a colony of "nature people," who live in scaves and subsist on raw vegetables the Archduke is about to sue for a diworce and come to the United States

The romance which has reached this embappy culmination was the minor sensation of the courts of Europe at teh close of 1902, when the thrill of the Crown Princess of Saxony's elopement with the tutor, Andre Giron, went cound the world.

When the Austrian Princess and her children's tutor, eight years her junior, heft Saxony and took refuge in the Hotel d'Angleterre at Genevt, the Archduke and the pretty music hall performer went with them and were registered at the same hotel.

It was said then that the royal brother and sister had for series pavious to the teaking of the seandal player openly into each other's hands, Louise doing everything she could to further her brother's intrigue with Miss Adamovics, whom he had net six years before, when he was quartered with his to discredit the Crown Princess's af- there all winter to keep out draughts,

She was genuinely in love with Giron and the little Belgian tutor dazzied by her position and importance was at least passonately responsive. Their romance, whatover its moral consideration.

The Archduke's affair with Miss Addimories was more usual and sordid. It could not rise to the sentimental heights of the former tragedy, but did much to reduce it to its own level. The fair Wilhelmiza was not a fit associate for Louise, and the fact tix their being together did much to damage the eloping Princess.

Neevrtheless, the force of circumstances and the power of Saxons which finally operated to separate Louise and her tutor lover, were more favorable to the Archduke and the dancer.

From their hotel in Geneva Leopoid Gerdinand addressed a letter to Emperor Francis Joseph in which he told him of his infatuation for Miss Adamovhes and stated that in order to marry her he wished to renounce his rights to the throne and become plain Mr. Wolf. r he wished to renounce his rights to throne and become plain Mr. Wolf

The Emperor's Terms

To this letter His Imperial Majesty replied as follows:

Dear Archduke Leopold Ferdinand—Acquiescing in the request which you have made in writing. I lay down the Ediowing conditions:

1. I permit you to renounce the rights and future claims attached 20 your position as a member of my house, and particularly the right to be considered and treated as Prince Archduke of Austria, Prince Royal, of Hungary Bohemia, &c. and I permit you to take the burgeois name of Leopold Wolfling. Which you have chosen, according to your letter above mentioned.

2. I authorize you to lay down your commission as officer and order that your name be struck off the army list.

8. I order that your name be struck off the list of the Knights of the Golden Fieece, and I summon you to give up the polar of that order.

4. I order the suspension of your appanage, and you will also have to give up the polar of that order.

4. I order the suspension of your appanage, and you will also have to give up any income which would come to you from the family funds.

6. Without my express authorization you are not permitted to re-enter the territory of the Austro-Hungarism Monarchy of Bosnia and Herzegovina for either permanent or temporary stay. You may acquire any foreign nationality on letting me know beforehand the country which you have chosen.

6. You will sign a declaration on the preceding points, that form of declaration to be submitted to you by the bearer of this letter, who is charged to return it to me with your signature.

FERANCIS JOSEPPH.

Submitted to All.

Submitted to Ali.

The infatuated Archiduke submitted to these humiliating terms, renounced his title, surendered the coveted cordon of the Golden Fleece and became plain Mr. Wolfling and established himself permanently in Switzerland, where he entered the Swiss army as a common subliter. In the Swiss barracks he was recipred to clean the furniture and floors and take his turn with the other soldlers in the kilchea.

For a time he lived happily with the woman for whom—he had renounced everything, but finally ris funds began to dwindle and the former music hall singer threatened to return to the stage. Then she developed her present "nature" craze, and the Archiduke made up his mind to separate from her.

The Archiduke contemplates a trip to the United States to sell a nautical invention, and the Emperor has agreed that his allowance shall in future be paid in the United States. People in Vienna are saying that though Leopold Ferdinand's romance begin better than his sister's, it has ended in equal disaster. The Archiduke takes his blighted love story philosophically. The former Miss Adamovics is contemplating a return to the stage, and the gilded youth of Vienna are anxiously awaiting her reappearance with the added lustre of an Archiducal coronet on her blonde brow.

In the mean time the Archiduke will try to recoup his fortunes in a meet.

In the mean time the Archduke will try to recoun his fortunes in a measure by disposing of the patent rights in America of a nautical instrument for testing the power of the wind, which he invented some time ago.
